GUIDE

FROM CHAPTER 13 OF SLEEP, BABY. PLEASE.

Breastfeeding & Sleep

The honest guide for moms who want to keep nursing
AND finally get some sleep.

- ♦ Yes, breastfeeding and sleep training ARE compatible
- ♦ When to drop night feeds — by age
- ♦ The unlatch technique that changed everything for me

SIX & THRIVING

Mother of Six — Including a Set of Twins

TO THE BREASTFEEDING MOM WHO'S BEEN TOLD SHE HAS TO CHOOSE

You don't have to choose.

I've heard it from hundreds of moms: 'I want to keep breastfeeding, but everyone keeps telling me I'll never sleep again unless I wean.'

It's not true.

Breastfeeding and independent sleep are completely compatible. I nursed every one of my six babies — including my twins — past 18 months. They all learned to sleep through the night while still breastfeeding.

The trick isn't choosing. It's separating the FEED from the FALL-ASLEEP MOMENT.

"Your supply will not disappear.
Your bond will not break.

Your baby will still nurse — they will just stop using the breast as a sleep tool."

This guide is the breastfeeding-specific section from my full book. It's the part new moms message me about most.

Read it. Try the unlatch technique tonight. Your supply will be fine. Your baby will be fine. You will start sleeping again.

With love and solidarity,

BY AGE

When to Drop Night Feeds

For breastfed babies — paediatrician approval first.

0–4 months

Feed on demand. All night feeds are nutritional.

DON'T DROP

4–6 months

Reduce to 1–2 feeds. Increase daytime calories.

REDUCE

6–9 months

Most babies can handle 0–1 night feeds.

ALMOST THERE

9+ months

If weight gain on track, night feeds are habitual.

READY TO DROP

THE MYTH BUSTER

Your supply adjusts to daytime demand within 3–5 days of dropping a night feed. Pump once before bed in the first few days if engorgement is a concern. After that, your body knows what to do.

QUICK TEST — IS IT NUTRITIONAL OR HABITUAL?

If your baby feeds for less than 5 minutes and drifts back to sleep — it's habitual. A truly hungry baby drinks purposefully, transferring real volume. Watch tomorrow night.

The unlatch technique. The dream feed. Both will change your nights this week.

TONIGHT'S TOOLKIT

Two Techniques That Change Everything

Try one tonight. Try both this week.

1. The Unlatch Technique

How to gently end a comfort feed without waking baby fully.

1

Watch for the flutter-suck

Slow, gentle, no swallowing. That's the comfort phase, not nutrition.

2

Slip your finger in

Gently into the corner of baby's mouth. Break suction softly.

3

Sit baby up briefly

Just enough to rouse them to drowsy — NOT fully awake.

4

Place in crib awake

A calm phrase. A kiss. Walk out. The feed-to-sleep link breaks here.

2. The Dream Feed

How to add 1–2 hours to your first stretch tonight.

OFFER AT 10–11 PM, BEFORE YOU GO TO BED

- ✓ Lights stay OFF. No talking. No diaper change unless soiled.
- ✓ Gently lift baby — keep them in a drowsy state.
- ✓ Latch them. Let them feed for 5–8 minutes.
- ✓ Place back in crib. They often don't fully wake.
- ✓ Use it for 2–3 weeks. Drop it when baby is sleeping through.

REPEAT IF NEEDED

Your supply will adjust within 3–5 days. Your baby will still nurse. You will still bond. You will just be sleeping.

WHAT EVERY BREASTFEEDING MOM ASKS

Real Questions, Honest Answers

Asked by hundreds of moms. Answered honestly.

Q Will my supply drop?

A No. Your body adjusts to daytime demand within 3–5 days of dropping a night feed. Pump once before bed in the early days if engorgement is a concern.

Q Is my baby actually hungry at night?

A If they feed for less than 5 minutes and drift back to sleep — it's habitual. A truly hungry baby drinks purposefully and transfers real volume.

Q Can I still nurse to sleep for naps?

A Ideally no — consistency matters most. But bedtime is the priority. If you're going to break the feed-to-sleep link somewhere, start there.

Q My baby refuses bottles from my partner. What now?

A Common. Have partner offer the bottle when baby is HUNGRY but not starving — about 15 minutes before usual feed time. Use a slow-flow nipple. Skin-to-skin during the bottle. Try 7–10 days before declaring it 'not working.'

Q Will my baby still bond with me if I stop nursing to sleep?

A Yes. The bond is built over thousands of nursing sessions during the day, in your arms, eye-to-eye. Sleep is taught separately. Your bond doesn't depend on how they fall asleep.

ONE LAST THING — IF THIS HELPED

This was 1 chapter.

There are 14 more.

The full book covers every method (Ferber, extinction, fading, chair, pick-up/put-down) with day-by-day timing charts. Plus the Six Sleep Personalities. Plus the Crib Hour technique nobody else teaches. Plus full chapters on twins, NICU babies, daycare, single parents, and the Reset Protocol if you've tried before.

Everything you need to be sleeping in 7 nights — written by a mom of six who lived every chapter.
